

A numerical value obtained in a sample and considered the best estimate of the population from which the sample is taken.

Note: For example, $\bar{x}$ and s are point estimates of μ and σ , which represent the mean and the standard deviation. A confidence interval is typically constructed around the point estimate.

(Related concept: confidence interval)