

A method of randomization that ensures that, at any point in a trial, an equal number of subjects have been allocated to each comparison group.

Note: Permuted blocks are often used in combination with stratified randomization.