In the evaluation of a diagnostic or screening test, a graphical depiction of the relationship between the true positive ratio (sensitivity) and the false positive ratio (1 - specificity) for various positivity cut-off points of the test.

Note: The area under the ROC curve is an expression of a test's performance independent of the patient population and can be used to compare several tests.