

All the characteristics of a study population that may influence the effect or the choice of a treatment and that must be taken into account when assessing treatment outcomes.

Note: Examples include disease severity and coexisting conditions.

Alternate spelling: case mix.