

A control group that is observed by the investigators at the same time as the treatment group, where the two groups were not established using randomisation.

Note: Differences in the characteristics of the subjects in the two groups may result.