

In clinical trials, the situation that occurs when the members of the control group receive the experimental intervention or when the subjects in the experimental group do not receive the intervention.