

In hypothesis testing, an error that occurs when it is incorrectly concluded that a null hypothesis is false.

Note: For example, a Type I error is made if a difference is detected between the outcomes in an experimental group and those in a control group when in fact such a difference does not exist. The probability of making this type of error is designed as alpha (α).

Syn.: Type I error.