

A theory resulting from the systematic gathering and analysis of information through the research process, with the objective of building empirically based theories in relation to social phenomena regarding which little analysis has been done.