

In a systematic review, the similarity of the studies selected.

Note: Studies are considered “statistically homogeneous” if their results vary no more than they might be expected to by chance. In a systematic review, “clinical homogeneity” means that the subjects, interventions and measuring instruments are similar or comparable.

Antonym: heterogeneity.