

In a systematic review, raw data for each study participant in each included trial, as opposed to aggregate data on the groups compared in each study.