

In a meta-analysis, a regression model for studying the relationship between the different study characteristics and the estimation of the effect observed in these studies.

Note: The study characteristics are, for example, the method of distribution into the groups, the type of blinding, the initial risk and the intervention administration schedule.