In hypothesis testing, a proposal that there is no association between two variables or no difference between two values.

Note: For example, the null hypothesis could indicate that an intervention has no effect, i.e. that there is no true difference between the results obtained in the experimental group and the control group.