

A clinical trial in which the investigator and the subject know who is receiving which intervention.

Note: This term is also used when only one intervention is being studied, for unblinded long-term follow-up studies or when blinding is difficult or unethical (comparison of a surgical treatment and a medical treatment, for example).