

The number of people in a population with a specific disease or condition at a given time, usually expressed as a proportion of the number of affected people to the total population.