

- 1) The ability of an examination or test, done repeatedly and in the same population, to produce the same result (test-retest reliability).
- 2) The ability of a single examination or test to always make the same distinction among individuals in a given population.