

The ability of an imaging device to distinguish two objects that are separate in either physical distance (spatial resolution) or in composition (contrast resolution).