

A public health service in which members of a population at risk for a disease or its complications are asked questions or offered a test, to identify those individuals who are at sufficiently high risk that further diagnostic tests or treatments are justified.