

A series of measurements of the same variables taken over time.

Note: A time series is said to be interrupted when a set of measurements is taken before an intervention is carried out or a change is made in a given system, and other measurements are taken over time after the change.