The ability of the result of a measurement or study to be accurate and free of bias (systematic errors).

Note: In the context of a study, two types of validity are recognized: internal validity and external validity. In the context of measurement, there are several types of validity: construct validity, content validity, face validity, etc.

Related concept: methodological quality